Sensibility & Romanticism
Description

The Age of Sensibility and Romanticism witnessed a surge of interest in emotional responsiveness, imagination, and individual subjectivity. These inward explorations coincided with a series of political, cultural, and philosophical debates that reconfigured public life and continue to shape our modern sensibilities. Among these were issues concerning sociability, the notion of childhood, the relationship between Enlightenment thought and political radicalism, the role of the creative artist, the education of women and the working classes, and the organization of knowledge. Taking taxonomy as an overall theme, this course begins by delineating approaches to perception, reading, and emotion that emerged during the long eighteenth century. Following this, we will examine seminal texts by William Wordsworth and Jane Austen before embarking on a series of thematic lectures on the city, education and children’s books, and the pleasures and pains of opium. This course explores a variety of primary source material in order to reflect the diversity of print culture between 1740 and 1820. Poetry, fiction, and essays will be examined alongside pedagogical theory, discourses on elocution and aesthetics, and visual art. Throughout the course, we will consider our own experience as readers of eighteenth- and early nineteenth-century texts in relation to reading practice during the period. How did rising literacy rates and innovations in textual production and circulation influence form, genre, and taste?

Learning Objectives

This course aims to develop critical reading, writing, and research skills through a study of eighteenth-century and Romantic literature and culture. It offers opportunities to engage with the concepts and networks of ideas that characterise literary discourse and to formulate independent, analytical arguments.
